Bristol, (England). The writer refers to "the mischance of our Bristol boxes." Is pleased that Carrison would like to have one of her drawings. Asks the addressee to choose the most beautiful and placid one. "I greatly value his friendship ... " Hopes the addressee will see Bristol before she goes to London and the Continent. Expresses admiration for Elihu Burritt. "I have seen nothing in his writings of compromising character ... Says that "his still, small voice" has united in a League of Brotherhood 20,000 English with as many Americans. Refers to "the unhappy proceedings about the printing press, etc. & the secretion of the Liberty party from the old Abolitionists, but which the writer can form (Continued ext card)

no opinion. The writer cannot condemn E. Burritt "solely because he lectured for Liberty Party." The English regard as Abolitionists all who exert themselves for the abolition of slavery. Mentions especially Dr. (John Gorham) Palfrey. The writer elobrates an analogy between Unitarians who hold other Christians unprincipled and Abolitionists who suppose people to be unprincipled because they have not separated from the Constitution. The writer is "glad to live at" a period which will be "a world era." Comments on the recent French revolution and on the signs of "free spiritual life" in Italy, Austria and Russia. eWorcester, (Mass.). The writer asks the addressee's advice about ways of initiating the fair in Worcester. While the addressee thinks that $300 may be raised here, the writer will be satisfied with nothing less than $500. Expects to have a competent person take charge of her "little one" when "we shall go to housekeeping on the first of April." Then she may be able to stir up a few towns. Hopes that Stephen (S.Foster) will have his throat and lung restored so that he can go to surrounding towns. It would be well for Caroline Weston and Mrs. (Oliver?) Johnson to come with the goods; their experience "will be invaluable." The presence of the addressee's younger sisters would a happy influence on some of the young ladies. Asks about the amount of debt of the American Society.

Bristol, England. The writer says that the French edition of Douglass' Narrative has been published. Also that events in France have strengthened English adherence to the monarchical form of government. Says Irish discontent is exaggerated. Quotes Webb as disapproving a separation of England and Ireland. Douglass favors the Liberty Party. The writer is well pleased with the Irish Reply. Disapproves the anti-Sabbath Convention and the theories of the Universelum. Comments on H. C. Wright's religious views. Says Longfellow's Evangeline reads better as prose than as poetry. Does not care for modern American poet Dislikes Garrison's condemnation of Sen. Hale. Is ied by French developments. Does not think that the Engl. should help Douglass. Asks who painted the portrait of Channing which he bought. Note

A . 9 . 2 20 Oct Vol.24 To "My dear friend" .Anne Warren Westons No.42 Dublin (Ireland) Offers his contribution for the Liberty Bell, also a letter from Edward Rushton to Thomas Paine. James Haughton contributed an article at the writer's request. Comments on Haughton's verbosity and suggests that the addres. see leave out as much as she pleases - "only put something in - for he is a true man - one of the best men I have any knowledge of." Remarks that there are "very few who know of or care for the cause here - and almost no literary people." The writer saw in the Liberator a notice by E. Quincy of a book called The Young Abolitionists; if it is good the writer would like a few copies of it. A.L.S. 4 p. 8 x 5 in. The two articles mention and the letter from Rushton are Chapman is said to have written to Mrs. (Mary) Howitt from Paris, and which was seen by a Miss Griffiths "who wonders that 'this woman' (meaning Mearias) should dare to write about him in such a manner." The substance of the letter was that Mrs. Chapman thought Douglass selfish and regretted his receiving so many personal presents from England. Douglass appeared cast down and offended. The writer thinks it would be absurd to have a fight with Douglass, whom she considers merely weak and touchy. Regrets that Maria W. Chapman is in correspondence th Mrs. Howitt at all. Mrs. Follen read to the writer a er from Miss (Harriet) Martineau concerning the Howitts. The writer is resolved "not to open my mouth about (John) Saunders or Mary He owitts or 1-sLeominster (Mass.) The writer assures the addressee that she does not "need to be warned of my duty to the cause." The fact is that this year the writer is too poor to give a cent. The ladies in town do not choose to work for the fair. The writer, however, will, with means provided by friends, cook something for the refreshment room. Also the writer has gathered greenery in the woods for the decoration of the Fair hall. Requests that her donations be called for at the depot. "I will bear in mind the Doughnuts."

Poplar St. (Boston): "The Fair is over! The receipts $31515 ... We are living, but just living. We have had so hard, I may say dangerous a time that we have unanimously resolved that we would never hold another. I mean under these circumstances..." The boxes from British cities arrived on December 6th, and were worked over on Sunday at the store of Samuel May's father. The writer was so exhausted from this work and from being drenched in the rain that Deborah was frightened at the sight of her. The writer and Mr. (Samuel) May were obliged to attend (the latter as speaker) the funeral of Mrs. Ford. Describes the preparatory work the fair at Faneuil Hall. "Mrs. (Samuel) May fought eve tep about the marking. She struggled to give away everything ... " The writer describes in detail her illness acquired from overwork, which obliged her to miss the first three days of the fair. Explains why less was taken in than last year. The non-arrival of the French boxes was injurious; the weather was bad; the writer's sickness cast the burden of the general oversight on Deborah, preventing her from selling; they were terribly short-handed. The speaking "was all as poor as it could be," except for Carrison and Willy (William Ingersoll) Bowditch. James Freeman Clarke addressed both the fair and a Free Soil tea party arranged by the Female Emancipation Society: The writer suggests that the (next) fair be held in Glasgow or Edinburgh. Tells of the ill effects of the fair on her ers. Discusses the possibility of Mme May's offering to hole a next fair. Gives news of the family at Weymouth and of various acquaintances. Boston? The writer enumerates her letters of acknowledgment to contributors abroad. Is sending twelve of the best Liberty Bells, some of which the addressee can present to Lady Byron and others. The writer will send Liberty Bells to H.Martineau, (Jane M.) Arnold, and (Eliza) Fletcher. "After the box is off. I hope the taste of the Fair will be out of my mouth." Discusses business affairs connected with the Liberty Bell. As there will not be enough to pay the bills, the writer would be glad to receive "some of .Edward S. . Abdy's legacy when you get it". The writer plans to have the next Liberty Bell edited by Edmund Quincy, who "would dot doing it." The writer is to visit Mrs. Follen in Cambria

They have long been jealous of us. If it was a godly jealousy, they have an opportunity to gratify its dictates." The sixteenth national A.S. Bazaar should be announced in the usual way. Thinks that $5000 might be raised. The remainder of the English goods "might do extremely well in some small hall in Boston." The Liberty Bell would be printed as usual in Boston, but published in Philadelphia. The addressees are to take counsel with Gary, Wendell Phillips, and E. Quincy. "The latter would man much better bell than I have Paris. Refers to a letter from Sarah Pugh consulting the writer about the advisability of sending an agent to England to solicit for the Philadelphia fair. At that time this did not seem to the writer advisable because of the provincial nature of the Philadelphia bazaar. Now the writer suggests that they secure all possible advantages "by assuming yourselves after consultation ... with our committee in Boston, the style and title of '16th National A.S. Bazaar, at Philadelphia'. Because of their commitments for the Freeman, they could not, like the Bostonians, turn over the what proceeds to the National Society, but they could state the noney above $1000 would be paid over as usual. The Liberty well, printed in Boston, should have the imprimatur of Philadelphia.

To "My dear Friend" «Caroline Weston»

Dublin, (Ireland). The writer and his wife approve of the plan to hold the Anti-Slavery bazaar in Philadelphia. Because of Quaker sympathies, donations might even be increased from Great Britain and Ireland. "In Dublin all the trouble is taken by my wife, myself and the Jennings family in Cork." Expresses sympathy for Lizzy (Elizabeth B. Chapman) who is suffering from rheumatic fever. The writer is glad that the addressee liked his piece in the Liberty Bell; remarks on the "lamentably and ... wonderfully small" number of literary people who have any interest in the cause. Admires Harriet Martineau's stand. Explain at no disrespect to H. M. was intended in the writer's 1 s to the Nat. A-S Standard. (Continued on next card) between Philadelphia and Boston. Doubts if J. Sturge and his followers will help the Carrisonians even though there is no Liberty party "or other class of Abolitionists who do not sympathize with you." "You have made yourselves of no present reputation. Reputation is the darling of the Quakers, and the Quakers are the backbone of all philanthropic efforts in England." "The times are so depressed that I don't hope we will be able to do much this year." Tells about a tour of the Western Highlands that he and his wife took. Writer sends his letter by the hand of Dr. William Henry Harvey, a botanist. Asks the addressee to accer gift of Dr. H.'s The Sea Side Book and mentions his poet A.L.S. 8 p. 9 1/4 x 7 1/2

To "My dear Friend"

Brooklawn, near Dublins The writer wants the addressee to visit him. Seems jealous of the Richard Allens, with whom the addressee plans to stay. Tells about his journey through Europe 16 years before. Deplores the French invasion of Rome. "About the Philadelphia people, I think Mrs. Chapman judges them a little too sternly." Discusses the attitude of the English Quakers toward the Philadelphians, which he thinks would be more favorable than their attitude toward the Carrisonians. The English Triends gave "the go by" to the New Organization when it secoded. Criticises Carrisonian intolerance. "And I think the na result of thoroughgoing abolitionism is to make a man fidel to the popular religion." (Continued on next card)
